What will you do when you get it?

Some 39 million households, accounting for almost 90% of U.S. families, will receive the enhanced Child Tax Credit. The Internal Revenue Service will issue the payments the middle of every month, from July 15 to December 15.

Eligible parents with kids under age six will get $300/month per child while parents with kids ages 6 to 17 will receive $250/month per child.

Millions of parents will view the money as a financial lifeline. The money could potentially halve child poverty when combined with other federal cash assistance, some researchers say.

The CTC money could potentially halve child poverty when combined with other federal cash assistance, researchers say.

But just like the government's previous COVID-related stimulus payments, some parents will regard the payments as a windfall. Seth Mullikin, principal at Lattice Financial in Charlotte, N.C., says this is a "good problem to have."

Mullikin and other financial advisers point out some savings and investment moves to help kids pay for college — and even put towards their retirement. They could also provide your child's first crash course in financial literacy, they add.

The tax credit has been around for decades, but the $1.9 trillion American Rescue Plan made some significant changes for one year only. It increased from $2,000 per child to $3,600 for children under age 6, and $3,000 for kids ages 6 to 17.

The CTC was previously paid as a lump sum, layered onto a person's income-tax refund. Half of the total amount will paid as an advance in monthly installments, for this year only for qualifying families.

Surprising benefits of 529 plans

Families can withdraw money from a 529 account without paying federal and state income taxes on it in most states, as long as the funds go toward qualified higher education expenses like tuition, books and laptops.

A student with a scholarship can still use the money for other costs like room and board. If the intended beneficiary doesn't go to college, the money can be rolled over to another person in their family.

Catherine Valega of Green Bee Advisory in Boston, Mass., said such a plan would be a great place to start for families who are looking for places to deposit their extra CTC cash.

By the end of 2020, there were almost 15 million 529 college savings accounts, according to the College Savings Plans Network.

Like 401(k) accounts, 529 accounts are defined-contribution plans tied to market performance. How the money is invested depends on the risk tolerance and the number of years before college starts.

Many plans offer age-based investment options that grow increasingly conservative as the beneficiary nears college. Risk-based investments, regardless of the beneficiary's age, are another option.

The earnings inside the tax-advantaged 529 plans will not be taxed by the IRS, nor by state tax authorities, according to H&R Block HRB, 0.23%. Contributions to a 529 plan are not deductible in federal taxes.

Even a little helps. Say the parents of a one-year-old child deposit $3,600 into a 529 plan. With a 6% annual return and no further contributions, that money will grow to $10,275 when the child is age 18, he said.

By the end of 2020, there were almost 15 million 529 college savings accounts, according to the College Savings Plans Network, an organization offering information to states running college savings plans.

These accounts contain more than $425 billion in assets and the average balance was $28,679 by the end of the year, the organization said.

Retirement accounts? Yes, really

There are various types of custodial accounts — accounts that parents establish when their children are minors — but Valega and Mullikin say a custodial Roth IRA is a good option for the enhanced Child Tax Coronavirus Update: Fauci says vaccine boosters are not needed for now

Traditional IRAs contain pretax dollars, so the money is taxed when withdrawn. But the money in Roth IRAs is post-tax, so it can be withdrawn tax-free decades from now. What should you do with CTC cash? Valega says, "Let's do a Roth."

Not only does it give an individual the obvious advantage of getting a head start on saving for retirement, but owning such an account can put retirement on your child's radar and kickstart their retirement planning.

Would you like your child to wow his or her classmates with the latest on subjects like IRAs, taxes and compound interest? "You are going to be light years ahead of all your peers in terms of financial literacy," Valega said.

There are caveats. As MarketWatch's Tax Guy Bill Bischoff explains: "When funds are transferred into a minor child's custodial account at a financial institution or brokerage firm, the funds now irrevocably belong to that child."

The current maximum annual contribution for a custodial account is $6,000, or the the maximum of a child's earned income for the year — whether it's babysitting or gardening — whichever amount is less, according to Fidelity Investments.

If a child just makes $2,000 from a summer job, $2,000 is the contribution limit. The money does not need to come directly from the child's wallet, Mullikin noted. Parents, for instance, may decide to match their kid's income with contributions.

Other types of custodial accounts include brokerage accounts, but Valega said parents and kids need to be careful. A custodial brokerage account is technically the child's asset, and they oversee it when they are no longer a minor.

Some 20% of custodial accounts should be made available for college bills to avail of federal financial aid. A maximum of 5.64% of 529 college savings plans should be made available for college to qualify for federal financial aid.

Roth IRAs are not deemed an asset by federal financial aid formulas when assessing parents ability to pay for their children's college fees, Valega said.

Set up an estate plan

Some narents should consider skinning the CTC cash experts say because the advanced navments are Coronavirus Update: Fauci says vaccine boosters are not needed for now jointly.

If the IRS determines that the CTC has been overpaid a family based on their 2021 income, it will either deduct the overpayment from the household's refund next tax season or tack the sum onto the tax bill.

If you already have a 529 plan and/or custodial account for your children, consider setting up a will and/or a living will for healthcare decisions, said Gregory Giardino, a financial adviser at J.M. Franklin & Company, based in Tarrytown, N.Y.

Wills can dictate inheritances, who serves as a guardian for a child and a trustee for an estate.

Wills can dictate inheritances, who serves as a guardian for a child and a trustee for an estate. Related documents can state who serves as power of attorney. Such documents are "invaluable in protecting your children," he said.

But many Americans overlook the process. Two-thirds of Americans in one December survey said they didn't have a will and media reports are dotted with stories of wealthy celebrities who have died without wills.

Attorneys can charge between $150 and $600 to draft a will, according to LegalZoom. The cost might range up to $1,000, according to AARP, formerly the American Association of Retired Persons.

"It can create more control and direction over your wealth, should the unexpected occur," Giardino said. After 16 months of a global public-health crisis, many parents might be able to relate to that.
